Description

This shell pendant was collected from Melanesia area and dates from the mid to late 20th century. This pendant features an orange shell wrapped in fibers with curled fiber cord. Pendant is contained in a woven pouch with excess fibers wrapped behind. In many Melanesian communities, shells were utilized as a form of currency and simultaneously as supplies for high-priced commodities. As a form of currency, shells were used in trades along the coast and nearby islands. The further distance a shell traveled, the higher their value would increase. Therefore, the price and social value of a shell-made object increased depending on the inclusion of a well-traveled shell. A shell will signify important qualities about the wearer their wealth, initiation level within a clan membership, and ideas of ritual practice. As a bride price exchange, the use of particular shell may indicate the bride new family's financial and social influence in the community.
